About the Regional Refugee Forum North East (RRF)

We are an independent membership organisation, established in 2004 by and for the North East region's Refugee-led Community Organisations (RCOs). Our central aim is for the Collective Voice of our membership to influence Policy and Practice so as to promote equality and improve the lives of all refugees and asylum seekers living in the North East of England.

Our members work together to produce their authentic, collective, advocate voice and make sure it is directly heard by policy makers, commissioners, and service delivery teams so as to influence policy and practice. They speak up about the distinct, recurring and shared challenges that refugees and asylum seekers (RAS) face and offer practical recommendations for what would work best to tackle hardship and promote equality and integration for all living in the North East.

We are not a service provider. We contribute to change through the collective action of our members, through promoting evidence based policy, through informing commissioning, and through influencing the way services are delivered by front line practitioners. We pursue a strategy of constructive engagement and collaborative working.

Purpose of this project

Many Refugees and Asylum Seekers want to take action to improve the lives of the communities they are part of. These are people who are committed to securing equality, human rights and social justice for disadvantaged communities. This is often the reason why they had to seek asylum. For others, it's a commitment born out of lived experience of the particular challenges RAS face in settling and integrating in the region.

Whilst back home they had the skills and confidence to challenge failing or unfair systems, without a 're-orientation' map for how things work in the UK, and where levers for change exist, they are disempowered. They want to be agents of change but, unless they have a chance to understand how change happens in the UK context and who to engage with and collaborate with in the process, they struggle to make a real difference.

From over 15 years' experience of working with the RAS community in the region, we know the unique contribution to change that motivated individuals can make if only their commitment and potential can be realised. But most would-be change makers never get far on this journey. They encounter setbacks, frustration, feel defeated and give up. Our project aims to ensure this does not happen. It aims to empower them to take the lead in civil society and be agents for change for the RAS community.

Over the next 3 years, our project will work with 150 would-be change makers from the RAS community living across the North East region, from Ashington to Darlington, and Sunderland to Durham. These will be people from across the asylum and refugee journey, including recently arrived asylum seekers, those still awaiting a decision or facing refusal, refugees resettled in the region, people granted leave to remain, and those who now have citizenship. Through a combination of group learning, peer learning and one to one support, the project will build their knowledge, skills and relationships so they can be effective agents for change in the issues they identify as affecting the lives of the communities they belong to, including health and wellbeing, asylum support, economic and social inclusion, community safety, and family resilience. We will use a 'Learning Communities' model, where groups of peers create a space to discuss real challenges, supporting each other to reflect on the complex judgements they have to make in bringing about change, assess what could be done differently, problem solve, innovate, motivate and support each other, fill knowledge and skills gaps, and so improve their capacity to be effective change makers.

We are looking for someone who is passionate about the potential of refugees and asylum seekers themselves to lead action to improve the lives of others in their communities, and who understands what 'empowerment' means, and what it involves.

We are also interested in applicants with an appetite for a long term future in our organisation in relation to management, innovation and leadership.
